

NARM™ Demo Workshop

An Experiential Workshop: The NeuroAffective Relational Model™ for Working with Attachment, Relational and Developmental Trauma

Brad Kammer, LPCC

Brad Kammer is the NARM Faculty Trainer and Training Director. He has studied under his mentor Dr. Laurence Heller for nearly 20 years and is a NARM Practitioner and Consultant. Brad is also a Somatic Experiencing Practitioner, Consultant and Instructor. He began his career as a Humanitarian Aid Worker in Asia which introduced him to personal and collective trauma. Brad has since focused his work on the integration of Somatic Psychology, Interpersonal Neurobiology, and wisdom from Spiritual Traditions and Traditional Cultures. Brad lives in Northern California with his family where he is a Somatic Psychotherapist, College Professor, and International Presenter on Shock and Developmental Trauma.

The next phase of healing trauma is here. In fact, if you have been introduced to the ACEs (Adverse Childhood Experience) Study, you already know how essential it is to recognize and work with the developmental and relational wounds we all have experienced.

The NeuroAffective Relational Model™ (NARM™) is a cutting-edge model for addressing adverse childhood experiences (ACEs), supporting affect regulation and resolving complex trauma (C-PTSD).

Join us for this special opportunity to observe live NARM sessions. This unique workshop is for anyone interested in seeing how NARM works for healing attachment, relational and developmental trauma. This is a wonderful opportunity to learn first-hand how to apply NARM theory and skills in working with elements of Complex Trauma including shame, guilt, anxiety, depression, helplessness, self-criticism and self-hatred. Participants will volunteer for demonstration sessions, with time to reflect and discuss the demonstrations between sessions. We will create a safe and welcoming group that is focused on learning and exploration.
